 Chair: PS REDDY, Kwazulu Natal University, South Africa
 Invited speakers: Juraj Nemeč, Masaryk University, Czech Republic Cristina Rodriguez Acosta, Florida International University, United States John-Mary Kauzya, United Nations, United States James Nkata, Uganda Management Institute, Uganda About the theme of the session The new international development framework, popularly referred to as the "Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs)" was adopted and endorsed by the United Nations (UN) in 2015 and implemented effectively from 1 January 2016. It replace the Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) which was ushered in 2000, and had a lifespan of 15 years since its introduction in 2015. The SDGs are being internationally championed by the UN and has a limited lifespan (2016-2030). The MDGs were viewed as "top down", with limited consultation at the grassroots levels, particularly by the developing countries resulting in limited ownership of the process. Attainment of the SDGs is crucial as it impacts positively on basic services delivery and in...

3:15pm - 6:00pm LAGPA S2: LAGPA Session 2 Neo-Populism and Models of Governance

Location: Paracas I

Chair: James Batista Vieira -Society Brazilian Public Administration (SBAP) Speakers: José Manuel CANALES ALIENDE (Spain) Fernando TENORIO (Brazil) Boris PEÑA FORTES(Cuba) Latin America and the whole world are witnessing a revival of populist currents that present themselves as representatives of both neoconservative and neosocialist ideal, but in other cases, they also raise ideologies of an eclectic nature, “anti-politics” ratifying administrations and visions of managerialist cut. These governments, popularly elected under conspicuous and visible slogans, collect popular wills generally oriented to the rejection of the political class, the vindication of nationalisms and criticism of the phenomenon of commercial integration or economic opening. In the exercise of power, they face noticeable contradictions with the traditionally established institutions and raise counter-currents that promote reforms that even go against commercial agreements and international law. They are...

Location: Nazca II

Chair: Benoit CATHALA, M., France

Invited Speakers: Gwénaëlle Juan, Centre National de la Fonction Publique Territoriale, France Antonio Maldonado, Peruvian Bar Association, Peru Najat Zarrouk, African Local Government Academy, Kingdom of Morocco The panelists will present and discuss the two following CNFPT-IASIA projects/tools on the meaning and values of public action as well as on the increasing local institutional reforms at a European level: Part I : European Charter for Civil Servants on the meaning and purpose of public action This charter outlines the aims and commitments that give meaning and purpose to public action in civil servants' daily practice. Public action protects and upholds the social contract, democracy and the rule of law. It protects human rights and works towards common good for society. It serves as a pillar, a shield and a lever for society. It promotes public interest and enhances social cohesion. Civil servants, in their daily practice, play key roles in making public action goals...

PA Assoc. & Networks: Public Administration Associations and Networks

Location: Paracas II

Chair: Bianor Scelza CAVALCANTI, International Association of Schools and Institutes of Administration / Getulio Vargas Foundation, Brazil

Invited speakers: Liezel Lues, Association of Southern African Schools and Departments of Public Administration and Management, South Africa Marlos Lima, Fundação Getulio Vargas, Brazil James Batista Vieira, Brazilian Society for Public Administration Cristian Pliscoff, Red Interamericana de Educación en Administración Pública (Inpae), Chile About the theme of the session The public sector is under pressure all around the world. Trust in public institutions is low, and citizens require the government to be more transparent and accountable. With the economic and financial crisis and with the migration crisis also hitting several regions, a number of citizens feel abandoned and call for their government to respond to their needs. However, the government's response largely depends on the public servants' capacity to deliver public services. National schools of administration (NSAs) play a crucial role in this process through their programs of education and training for public...

Location: Paracas I

Chair: Ruben Dario ECHEVERRY, Universidad del Valle, Colombia

Speakers: William MUÑOZ MARTICORENA (Peru) Carlos ORTIZ QUEVEDO (Colombia) Alfredo BENITES (France) This session of commercial integration aims to analyze in a critical and systematic way, all those processes of trade liberalization and economic opening that have taken place in Latin America in recent years, after the 1990s and that have been established under the design and implementation of commercial public policies that affect the trade of these countries. These commercial policies have had as their fundamental axis two types of public actions: the first one, to intensify all the processes of commercial integration with other countries through free trade agreements, from neighboring or farther countries. Besides, the trade has been liberalized with important reductions and tariff reforms, in a continent that was traditionally protectionist until the 1970s and 1980s, in a model that sought to replace imports and build economic development that was called: "inward development"...

12:30pm Location: Inka I

Chair: Alketa PECEI, FGV, Brazil

This session is intended to be an interactive dialogue on publishing in our field. After an overview of "tips for success" and some "pitfalls" to avoid, participants will engage with each other in a discussion of their own strategies for getting published. Questions to consider prior to the session are: What has worked for you in getting published? Do you tend to "say something that has not been said before" or "say better what has been said before"? How do you select a title that captures the point of the paper/book and grabs attention? How do you "say it well"? How do you write for the reader? How do you strike a balance between theory and application? How do you decide which journal outlet to send your paper to? What are some of the "mistakes" that you have made? What are your "lessons learned"? Participants are encouraged to bring a draft manuscript with them for small breakout group discussions. Participants are also invited to attend the PhD seminar organized on Tuesday 24...

ICAPA: ICAPA Accreditation

Location: Nazca II

Chair: Juraj NEMEC, Masaryk University Brno, Czech Republic

Invited speakers: Benoit Cathala, Centre National de la Fonction Publique Territoriale, France Ishaq Ameen, Bahrain Institute for Public Administration, Kingdom of Bahrain James Nkata, Uganda Management Institute, Uganda The past several decades have been complex and demanding for those who have been entrusted with managing governments around the world. The citizens' wish for more and better public services, increased governmental accountability and greater participation in policy making processes, combined with rapidly changing technologies, have in turn placed great strains upon the education and training institutions which produce public administrators. Thus, as the demands for greater government responsiveness grow, so do the demands for improved public administration education and training. One response has been the development of accreditation systems such as the recently established one by IASIA and EGPA/NISPACee. The International Commission on the Accreditation of Public...
